

The Soulard Restorationist

VOLUME II ISSUE I

MARCH, 1977

Agenda

Following is the tentative agenda for the membership meeting to be held on Wednesday, March 2 at 7:30 P.M. at St. Agatha Parish Hall, 9th and Utah:

1. Election to fill one vacancy on the Board of Directors.
2. Discussion re: contract to dig holes for city tree planting.
3. Report of the Membership Committee.

Notes from last meeting

At the February 2 meeting of the Soulard Restoration Group, it was decided to reschedule the election to fill the Board vacancy for the March meeting and to open further nominations to the floor. No one else accepted nomination so the candidates remain as follows: Gary Cope and Jim Mazdra.

The Newsletter Committee is selling advertisements to defray costs of producing the newsletter and it was suggested that members support the businesses who advertise in the Restorationist.

The Membership Committee is having a membership drive during February for non-voting members and in March for voting members. Applications will be attached to the Newsletters.

A Southside Scout Troop is interested in an ongoing project in Soulard and this will be planned jointly with the SRG.

The Soulard Restoration Group is now a tax deductible organization. The Group was the only one to bid on providing holes for the free city trees and thus has been awarded the contract. The project will commence in the summer.

EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF MISSOURI HERITAGE TRUST VISITS SOULARD

Charlotte Watchinski, Executive Director of the Missouri Heritage Trust, Inc. toured the Soulard Historic District on the evening of January 27th. The purpose of her tour was to see the growth and progress of the Soulard area and to meet the area residents who are responsible for the area's rebirth. Mrs. Watchinski had a favorable reaction to what she saw. "The growth of the Soulard Restoration Group over the last year is proof that the neighborhood is being awakened to the importance of its past. There is still much to be done, but if the interest and enthusiasm shown by the few residents of Soulard with whom I became acquainted is typical of the Group, your neighborhood is well on its way to recovery".

The Rowleys, the Gatermanns, Ruth Day, Garry Waters and Larry Hollenberg opened up their homes to give Mrs. Watchinski a first hand view of the activity which is evident throughout Soulard. The Missouri Heritage Trust, Inc., a new statewide preservation effort, is now a little over a half year old. Membership is $10.00 per year and is tax deductible. Membership information may be obtained by writing the Trust at Box 895, Jefferson City, MO. 65101 or by calling 314 635-5757.

VAN IS LEASED BY TWO COMMUNITY GROUPS

In January, 1977, St. Agatha Day Care Center, 9th and Withnell and the Sigel Community School at 2050 Allen Avenue began jointly leasing a van for use as transportation for both programs.

Sigel Community School provides after school activities for school age children and evening classes and activities for area residents of all ages. St. Agatha provides day care for 59 preschool children as well as after school care for as many as 30 school aged children. Both organizations are presently funded by block grants from the Community Development Agency which approved the agreement between the two groups.

St. Agatha will have full use of the van from 7:00 A.M. through 3:30 P.M. Mondays through Fridays. Sigel takes possession at 3:30 P.M. for use during its evening program. Throughout the summer months when both organizations operate full day programs, each organization will have the van for three full days each week. The present lease expires in December, 1977, but is renewable.

This agreement represents a fine example of cooperation and pooling of resources between two community organizations. It will immeasurably benefit the quality of both programs by increasing opportunities to expose the children to new and varied experiences in the Greater St. Louis area.

SOULARD MUST BE COMING UP ???

A member of the Restorationist staff recently received an advertisement from Time magazine. The opening lines read as follows. "Frankly, you're someone magazines such as Harper's, the New Yorker and Time most want as a subscriber. Judging from your neighborhood, you're far above average in means, intellect and influence...."

LSRC TO DEVELOP RUTGER STREET

Greg Neidt, chairperson of the Redevelopment Committee of the Lafayette Square Restoration Committee, recently described a "Master Plan" for Rutger Street in the Lafayette Square Historic District.

The plan is to be implemented through the Community Development Agency Speculative Rehabilitation Program. Rutger Street, between Mississippi and South 18th, was selected as the target area because the LSRC has gained control of a number of houses in this block through its revolving fund, and because private interest in this block has been minimal, compared with interest in other areas of the district, according to Neidt.

The initial LSRC development is to consist of the exterior rehabilitation of three buildings in the block. The interior of one of the buildings will be completed, too. Sale of the units upon completion of the work will fund repayment of the loan. The Community Development Agency will guarantee a half of the money borrowed for the rehabilitation; the buildings in their projected state of completion will be used as collateral for the remainder of the funds. No general membership money of the LSRC will be encumbered, according to Neidt.

In describing the project, Neidt said: "It is essential that the LSRC undertake projects of this magnitude in order to ensure the continued financial participation of the City of St. Louis in the area. The City has already spent a considerable amount of money in Lafayette Square in the form of street improvements, etc. We cannot expect this generosity to continue without a strong collective demonstration that we believe the area is a good financial risk. The successful completion of this project will give us the necessary capital and 'track record' for future undertakings of this nature.

LUXURY ON BOHEMIAN HILL

A "new" apartment building has recently opened in Soulard. The Soulard Market Apartments stand as an excellent example of exterior restoration and interior renovation. While keeping the original exterior, minus a fire escape system that gave it the look of an abandoned warehouse, the building has been rebuilt inside. It features large rooms, high ceilings and extensive use of exposed brick. Each unit in the building has an all electric kitchen, wall-to-wall carpeting, central air conditioning and either a balcony or a porch which faces an enclosed rear garden.

The owner of Soulard Market Apartments, Paul Piersma, is a member of the SRG. Although Paul currently lives in Compton Heights, he is very excited about the prospects in Soulard, especially the area around the Market Apartments.

The location of the Soulard Market Apartments, Ninth and Lafayette, is the one time site of the Liggett, Hudson and Butler's Tobacco Factory. Once known as Bohemian Hill, due to the large Bohemian population located there, this section of Soulard was a thriving residential and commercial area by the second half of the nineteenth century. Even today, this area is ideal for the city dweller. The apartments are located less than one block from Soulard Market and only one block from one of the best meat markets in the city. The Lafayette bus runs right by the Market Apartments and the Broadway and Cherokee bus routes are only a few blocks away.

Three styles of apartments are available. The studio apartments have 700 square feet of living space and can also be used as offices or shops. Two story, two bedroom townhouses are also available with 1500 square feet of space. An alternate two bedroom design has a loft bedroom and a spacious two story living room.

Rental information can be obtained from Victor Frankel & Co. at 533-4742.

INSURANCE QUESTIONS ANSWERED

Copies of the Shopping Guide for Homeowners Insurance and the Shopping Guide for Auto Insurance, published recently by the Interim Committee on Insurance Practices, are available for inspection at the Group Library at the home of Darlene and Skip Gattermann, 2310 S. 12th St.

Basically, the guides contain rate quotations from a number of different firms for insurance. Although major companies are planning rate increases this spring, the material makes interesting reading. At present, all St. Louis city and county libraries also have copies of the two booklets.

The guides are meant to provide assistance and to encourage insurance consumers to "shop" for their insurance needs and thus to encourage competition among insurance companies.

In relation to the guides, Missouri Senate Bill No. 201 is an "unfair insurance practices act". This legislation would prohibit unfair discrimination by insurance companies, and it would give the Missouri Division of Insurance the authority to determine if rates and eligibility requirements are fair and reasonable. The bill was designed to eliminate redlining.

Missouri Senate Bill No. 268, prohibits insurance companies from cancelling a residential fire or homeowners insurance policy, after it has been in effect for sixty days, in the middle of the term. It also prohibits insurance companies from refusing to write, cancel or non-renew such insurance solely on the basis of street address or area, sex, race, lawful occupation, etc.

Public hearings on these two bills are being scheduled in Jefferson City. Copies of the proposed legislation can be reviewed at the SRG Library.

NEWS AND NOTES

This is a new addition to "The Restorationist". Each month we plan to bring to you small news items of general interest to the Soulard community. If you know of such news, please call 771-4191 to report it.

Do you eat cereal? Well, if you do you can help get equipment for the St. Agatha Day Care Center. The Center can use your Post Cereal Box Top. Box tops must be collected by March 31. Give your box tops to Judy Shehan, phone 664-3497.

At the January 27th meeting of the Landmarks and Urban Design Commission the following items were approved: Exterior alterations and repair of the Soulard Market, interior and exterior alterations to 2212 Menard, construction of stairs at 1717-19 S. 7th, and sign construction at 1711 S. 7th. The meeting was attended by our president, Dick Phelps.

Darlene Gatermann is working as volunteer nurse at the St. Agatha Day Care Center. She is reviewing and updating health records of the Center's children.

Also planned are health care classes for the students.

Recently with the extremely cold weather, the gas mains and services to homes in the 900 block of Soulard Street broke. Around the clock repair work and laying of a new main went on during the first days of February. Full service has been restored to home owners.

With the help of the Restoration Group, a troop of Southside Boy Scouts is planning to make a pocket park in Soulard on one of our vacant lots. Details are yet to be formulated, but by the time spring temperatures arrive, we should be seeing some results.

TO THE EDITOR

An interesting point came to mind the other day concerning restoration. "There isn't going to be any more available land in the near future." Today many government agencies speak of world famine. Accordingly, there is a strong movement towards zero population growth.

Conservation of available land is just as vital as population control. As the older parts of the cities are abandoned and the new suburbs are built, less and less productive land is left for agriculture. Thus, the restoration of our older homes and neighborhoods becomes more important.

Another strong impetus toward restoration is financial. The restoration of the inner city tax base is synonymous with neighborhood restoration. The new convention center will be lovely, but won't assist the city financially as much as a fully restored community such as Soulard will become. The day to day, year after year purchasing and producing of a restored city is the key to regaining the status once associated with St. Louis.

Jean Brunton.

THE GREENING OF SOULARD WAY BACK IN 1912 AND IN 1977

In the "Annual Report of the Park Commissioner" dated April 8, 1912 some very enlightening facts about the history of Soulard's parks were given. The park now referred to as Soulard Market Park and Playground was called Soulard Place Playgrounds in 1912. The park was purchased with bond issue funds of 1906. The report states that farmers came in the early morning hours with their fresh produce to the market and sold it directly from their wagons. By noon the farmers were gone and the park became almost three blocks square and was used as a spacious ballfield.

Pontiac Square Playgrounds was opened in 1912. The playgrounds were a great success because the slope of the ground made it possible to plan the park with little difficulty.

The two parks in 1977 may once again be centers of community activity and pride. With funds provided by federal community block grant monies, refurbishing and restoring of the parks is taking place. The landscaping of both parks is already underway.

Last year the band stand in Soulard Market Park was restored under the direction of Mrs. Buckowitz and the Department of Parks. Restoration plans for the parks were drawn up by one of Soulard's residents, Paul Kjorlie.

NOTEWORTHY

Burton Hillis, who writes "The Man Next Door" for Better Homes and Gardens would feel right at home in Soulard. He wrote in the magazine's February issue, "One of the intriguing things about having an older house like ours is the anticipation of going home each night to find out what broke down during the day."

SERVING ST. LOUIS: HOLY TRINITY SLOVAK

The Slovak people were one of the latter ethnic groups to settle in Soulard. Arriving in St. Louis in the last half of the nineteenth century, most Slovak immigrants came not directly from the mother country, but from the eastern section of the United States. Since their language and customs were similar to those of the Bohemians, the Slovaks quickly established themselves within the parish of St. John Nepomuk. From the beginning, however, there was a yearning among the Slovak people for a church of their own. Even while worshiping in the Bohemian parish, they expressed their need for a Slovak identity by the formation of Slovak religious societies. The Holy Trinity Society, which was the St. Louis branch of the First Catholic Slovak Union, was begun in 1893 and the First Slovak Ladies Union was organized in 1896.

The dream of a Slovak church in St. Louis was realized in 1898, when Reverend Bilo Duchon agreed to become the parish's first priest and the Baptist church at 12th and Park was purchased and dedicated to the Most Holy Trinity. The early years of the church were rather tenuous. The congregation was small and carried a heavy debt. Father Duchon resigned and moved back east. During these first few shaky years, several different pastors presided over the church. There was an abortive attempt to establish a school. However, as the Slovak immigration to St. Louis continued, the church realized a steady growth. A successful school was begun prior to 1906 which continued until June of 1944. An event of some significance for Holy Trinity occurred in 1914 when the Reverend John Hurcik, the son of one of the founders of the church, celebrated his first Solemn Mass in the parish church. This marked the first mass performed by a native son. By 1923, Holy Trinity Slovak was able to host a national convention of the First Catholic Slovak Union.

A new difficulty beset the church in 1924. The city of St. Louis had been widening and improving Twelfth Street since 1922 and the church building found itself in the path of "progress". After a thorough study, the decision was made to purchase a church located at 1804 South 9th.

The building that was to become Holy Trinity's new home had been constructed in 1897 as St. Paul's German Evangelical, at a cost of $36,217.00. This structure was built to replace the original St. Paul's, which was constructed in 1850 and destroyed in the cyclone of 1896. The dedication of the church to the Most Holy Trinity on September 20, 1924, was the cause for much celebration, marked by a parade from the old building to the new.

In its new quarters, the church continued to prosper. Additions were made to the church hall and school building in 1937 and the church was remodeled in 1942. Holy Trinity suffered a setback in 1947 when the church was heavily damaged by fire. However, the people of the congregation were quick to rally to the task of repair and restoration.

In recent years Holy Trinity Slovak, like many of the churches in the area, has suffered from the problem of a declining membership. Today, it boasts a small but very dedicated congregation. It has many different fund raising activities, but is known throughout the area for its barbecues held during the summer months. This summer marks a special event for the congregation. Reverend James J. Pavlik, associate pastor at Holy Trinity Slovak will serve as spiritual director for a Pilgrimage to Rome in honor of the canonization of Blessed John Nepomucene Neumann.

Holy Trinity Slovak stands today as a tribute to the Slovak people and as an asset to Soular.

SOME THOUGHTS ON SPRING PLANTING

With everyone looking forward to the first buds of spring, it is time to consider just what it was the early homeowners planted in Soular. Yard space and light vary a great deal from home to home, making some of the choices for us. In the period our homes were built, many people were more practical than decorative about their yards. Many mixed herbs and flowers such as marigolds, mums, petunias, pansies and all types of bulbs - dahlia, amaryllis, daffodils, narcissis and garlic into a free form garden, practical as well as pretty.

Grape vines flourished and provided wines and jellies. Strawberries became attractive ground covers that were also good to eat. The window box also became a place for raising food and flowers such as herbs, lettuce.

Fruit trees as decoration against the stark brick walls were also to be found. Among the most popular varieties to be espaliered were pear, apple and peach. Where room permitted, larger trees such as oaks, Norway maples, and bald cypress were planted for shade. The native Missouri dogwood and redbud with their colorful spring flowers were used. Nut trees were also valued for their fall harvest.

The practice of foundation planting so common today was not practiced at the time. The cedar tree so often found in these groupings was used as privacy plantings and wind breaks. Used in the same manner were many varieties of shrubs. Among the most popular were the wigelia, mock orange and lilacs.

As a strictly ornamental flower, the rose was certainly the favorite and is still visible today around many of our homes. In the late 1860's the rose was most at home on an attractive trellis. So if you have a touch of spring fever, plan to take it out on your yard, and remember, it takes time, care, water and fertilizer to make your yard the showcase you would like to see. Shouldn't you plan for it now?

NEIGHBORHOOD STORES

The corner store or confectionery has always been a feature of South St. Louis living - a location where almost any item could be purchased at almost any time. The activity of selling is rather informal and friendly, bringing a personal touch to business. The customers' confidence is important and the merchant has to build a good reputation and standing within the neighborhood. The store owner usually lives on the premises or in the immediate area and is in a good position to win the confidence of his customers. He recognizes the importance of serving people and is conscious of local demand. He knows that housewives depend upon his judgment and trustworthiness.

In times past there were two time-tested general rules that applied to the successful operation of a neighborhood store in St. Louis: the merchant had to be competent and he had to remove trash from the sidewalks in front of his store as well as keep his portion of the alley clean.

Stores are normally arranged carefully and are of sufficient size to accommodate the goods and services for the people in the area. Usually everyone in the neighborhood patronizes the same stores. An exchange of local news and happenings permeates the interior as customers wait for the proprietor to ring up their goods.

The concept of the neighborhood store has been tried and has been found to be true. Besides continuing to flourish in the city, the neighborhood store has jumped the city limits and has come to rest in the county under the name of "Quick Shop".

EL CAMINO REAL

Long before Europeans ever laid eyes upon what is now Missouri, the Indians had made a path which ran from the present City of St. Louis to the place now called New Madrid, Mo. The Spanish government, which once controlled this part of the United States, realized that the population of the area was growing and decided to mark out a road following very closely this ancient Indian path in 1785. All roads built under the control of the Spanish government belonged to the king and were named "The Royal Road or El Camino Real.

The El Camino Real marked out in 1785 still exists today and follows fairly closely the same route. It is called Interstate 55 and the old El Camino Real has been extended to run up to Chicago and south to the Gulf of Mexico. I wonder what the Indians who made the original path would say today if they saw its modern counterpart, which forms the Souldard Historic District's western border.

La Maison

The Feurbacher Mansion at 1126 Sidney was once a spacious home built between 1862 and 1875 by Max Feurbacher, a German immigrant who arrived in St. Louis as a 17 year old youth. The son of a German brewmaster who had taught him the trade, Feurbacher was able to amass his fortune as the founder and owner of the Greentree Brewery.

The brewery was located between 9th and 10th Sts. on Sidney. A truck parking lot now occupies the original brewery site.

Neighborhood folklore reputes the house to have had a dubious, but colorful history. It is said to have been used as a segment of the underground railroad for freeing slaves during the Civil War. Then during World War I it was rumored to have served as headquarters for a spy ring. The older residents of the neighborhood have related tales of ghosts, a cave entrance, secret rooms with manacles and even a mythical pot of gold.

The house is presently owned by Michael and Carol Smith, who purchased it and moved to Soulard in May, 1975. At that time their most overwhelming task was the removal of numerous false partitions which had created many tiny rooms out of the original spacious interior. The other major project was the installation of the main staircase which had been removed when the house was converted into a rooming house.

The mansion boasts intact interior details such as wainscoted hallways, plaster medallions and mouldings, a main parlor with twin white marble mantels with brass trim and Eastlake over the mantel mirrors. Other notable interior features include original interior shutters and hardwood floors throughout. By far the most dramatic exterior feature are the two proud lions which guard the front entrance and which are believed to have been the first such decor in St. Louis.

The work completed as of this date includes the restoration of the first floor library with floor to ceiling bookcases, as well as partial updating of the plumbing and wiring systems.

The Smiths plan to restore and furnish most of the house as close as possible to the original Victorian decor. Deviations from the original will include updating the large kitchen to modern quality, a second bathroom on the second floor and the possible addition of a greenhouse on the second floor rear porch. Completion of the restoration has been tentatively and hopefully scheduled for the mid 1980's.

New Faces

THE SANSONES

While living with friends in the area, Fred and Martha Sansone are actively remodelling a four family structure at 2201 S. 11th St. into a home for themselves. They plan to make use of the space to create an open feeling, which will be further enhanced by the installation of a skylight in the rear roof. Fred, whose hobby is furniture refinishing, is employed by the Post Office. The Sansones have two children, Joshua and Joel.

BARTON STREET - THE MAN BEHIND THE NAME

Many streets have fascinating histories behind them. Barton Street is one of those streets which is fortunate to have an interesting history. Barton Street was originally called Martha Street. During the latter half of the 19th century the name was changed to Barton, in honor of David Barton. Barton Street has had at least one very famous resident residing on it, Ulysses S. Grant.

David Barton was born on December 14, 1783 in Greenville, North Carolina. Barton's family moved to the state of Tennessee where he eventually read law and entered the Tennessee Bar. Barton was unimpressive in his appearance, but was noted for his kind and charitable disposition. With three generations of ministers in the family preceding him to set examples at public speaking, he was well educated for frontier public speaking.

Barton came to Missouri to practice law and not long after this was made Attorney General of the Missouri Territory. Two years passed and he became Circuit Judge for the North District of Missouri. He then returned to a growing private practice. He was elected to the Territorial House of Representatives in 1818 and became House Speaker.

In 1820 he was made President of Missouri's Constitutional Convention. Barton was mainly responsible for the drafting of the constitution which became known as the "Barton Constitution." David Barton was chosen to run for the U. S. Senate and picked as his colleague to run for the other senate position Thomas Hart Benton. This would prove an unwise choice for Barton personally, because Benton usually sided with Barton's opposition in the Senate and this eventually contributed to Barton's ruin.

Another unwise decision was when Barton came out in favor of John Quincy Adams for President, while Benton came out for Andrew Jackson. Adams proved to be a very unpopular president.

Barton believed in clean, honest politics as did his brother, Joshua. In 1824 Joshua Barton became involved in a duel to defend the Barton position and name in politics and was killed. Barton felt personally responsible for his brother's death and carried this guilt with him for the rest of his life. From that time on his popularity steadily declined. Governor McNair and other Missouri politicians opposed his views.

In spite of all this, Barton finished his career in the Senate with a distinguished record. He sided with Daniel Webster's stand on preserving the Union and from his outspoken view on this he gained the nickname "Little Red".

DID YOU KNOW - That the official population of what we know today as Soulard was 18,000 in 1930. This population remained stable for two decades and rose slightly in 1950 to 18,500. The official population in 1970 was 5,500. (Figures do not include St. Agatha.)
